

CONTRIBUTORS

JOSH ANDERSON

is a Ph.D. student in the Stan Richards School of Advertising in the Moody College of Communication. His research focuses on science communication and specifically how scientific institutions engage with lay audiences in new media spaces and in the political sphere.

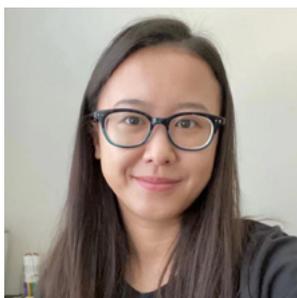

NATALIE BROWN-DEVLIN

(Ph.D., University of Alabama) is an Assistant Professor in the School of Advertising & Public Relations in the Moody College of Communication and the Associate Director for Research for the Center for Sports Communication & Media. Her research interests include social identity, sports crisis communication, and digital media.

MICHAEL L. BUTTERWORTH

is the Director of the Center for Sports Communication & Media, Governor Ann W. Richards Chair for the Texas Program in Sports and Media, and Professor of Communication Studies at The University of Texas at Austin. His research focuses on relationships between rhetoric, democracy, and sports.

QINYAN GAO

is a Ph.D. student in the Department of Communication Studies in the Moody College of Communication. Her research projects explore stress coping, privacy management, relationship maintenance, and stigma management in family, relational and health contexts.

OLIVIA GELLAR

is a Ph.D. student in the Department of Communication Studies in the Moody College of Communication. Her primary research interests explore the rhetoric of public controversies and the rhetoric of opposition voices, investigating their use of social media to gain and maintain power.

KATHRYN HARTZELL

is a Ph.D. student in the Department of Radio-Television-Film in the Moody College of Communication. Her interdisciplinary research focuses on globalization, cultural hybridization, global streaming platforms, and transnational sports media.

CONTRIBUTORS

LILY KUNDA

is a Ph.D. student in the Department of Radio-Television-Film in the Moody College of Communication. Her research focuses on contemporary issues in black popular culture with particular interest in constructions of race and identity on television and corporate activism relating to black social justice movements.

JENNIFER MCCLEAREN

is a feminist media scholar who examines the cultural production of difference in sports media. She is an assistant professor in the Department of Radio-Television-Film in the Moody College of Communication. She published her first monograph, "Fighting Visibility: Sports Media and Female Athletes in the UFC," in 2021.

MACKENZIE PIKE

(M.A., The University of Alabama) is a Ph.D. student in the Department of Communication Studies in the Moody College of Communication, focusing on interpersonal communication. An avid tennis player, Mackenzie's research examines language effects and interpersonal communication in sports.

NATHANIEL REPAY

is a Ph.D. student in the Department of Communication Studies in the Moody College of Communication. His research interests are primarily in exploring the relationship between communication and social order. He is a passionate fan of the Chicago Cubs, Milwaukee Bucks, and Green Bay Packers.

JINGYUE TAO

is a Ph.D. student in the Stan Richards School of Advertising in the Moody College of Communication. Previously, she worked and studied in the Silicon Valley and was a marketing specialist for a tech company. Her research focuses on new media and technology in advertising and crisis communication.

ABOUT THE CENTER FOR SPORTS COMMUNICATION & MEDIA

The Center for Sports Communication & Media brings together interests in the instruction, practice, and scholarship of sports journalism, broadcasting, media production, human communication, and more. It serves the mission of the Moody College of Communication and The University of Texas at Austin through its commitment to the highest quality of teaching, research, and interdisciplinary collaboration. The Center sponsors the Sports Media undergraduate minor, provides funding support for affiliate research, partners with organizations in sports media, and produces programming such as the Dan Jenkins Medal for Excellence in Sportswriting, the McGarr Symposium on Sports and Society, and the Frank Deford Lecture in Sports Journalism.

More information about the Center can be found at www.moody.utexas.edu/cscm, and our social media channels at Twitter (@UT_CSCM), Facebook (ut.cscm) and Instagram (ut.cscm).

Support for this report comes from the Governor Ann W. Richards Chair for the Texas Program in Sports and Media.

The University of Texas at Austin

Center for Sports Communication & Media

Moody College of Communication

Read (and download) the complete second annual Politics in Sports Media report

www.politicsinsportsmedia.org